

What Are Your Options with Transmission Repairs?

In the Metro Atlanta area, there are lots of options for transmission repair and transmission replacement shops. But, before you spend the money on a transmission repair, consider reading about their methods of making those repairs.

Read below to see why one of those options could be the wrong choice for your car.

Rebuilt transmissions: At Speedy Marietta, we perform a thorough transmission inspection to see which transmission parts will be required to get your transmission back in working order. Many parts can be reused as long as they fall within the manufacturers wear limits. The damaged transmission parts are replaced by our Master-Certified builder.

Why choose a rebuilt transmission? This method of transmission repair saves you time and money, since most transmissions do not need a total replacement. Not all shops are created equally- We only use NEW, quality parts in our rebuilds. Speedy Marietta transmissions and rebuilds are backed by our warranty!

Remanufactured transmissions: These are built in a factory or a warehouse setting. They are manufactured to be in a "like new condition". As with any manufacturing process, dealing with a reputable supplier is the key to having a quality transmission. Not all suppliers are reputable! It is best to let a transmission shop with a master certified technician help you make this choice.

Our staff has established relationships with quality suppliers to ensure you receive the highest quality product available. Replacement parts are new; the converter, case, extension housing, pump, valve body and internal components are inspected carefully and remanufactured to ensure proper specifications are met. According to the suppliers policy "longer warranties may be available for remanufactured transmissions". This may be a good option for some clients at Speedy Marietta. We can advise you which way is best for your vehicle.

Used transmissions: The least desired option is a Used Transmission, but for some may be the only option within their budget.

These are usually pulled right from a salvage yard. Typically, they do not even get cleaned up before a purchase.

With these salvaged items, users don't know the history, how it was serviced, or how it was driven. There is no way to perform an internal inspection before buying it, so buyers are taking a big risk!

There may also be unseen damage if the vehicle was in an accident. Used transmissions come with little to no warranty, leaving you to pay even more money in the future when something goes wrong.
